

Veronica Cassin

Director - Heritage

BArch. MA

Veronica trained as an architect and has specialised in heritage conservation and historic buildings for over twelve years. Her experience spans the disciplines of design, construction, planning and building conservation. She has worked in local government, in a policy development capacity, as well as across a variety of sectors in private practice. She understands demands of statutory compliance and commercial performance in both London and international contexts.

Experience

Veronica is a Director leading the London based Built Heritage team. She is assisted by a team of heritage consultants with a breadth of experience in the historic environment.

Veronica was previously involved with streetscape enhancements at Westminster Palace for Parliamentary Estates including security upgrades and crowd control. She is very experienced in statutory stakeholder consultation and the management of consent processes.

Veronica has a great deal of experience with a variety of conservation projects and is frequently engaged to advise on how to realise opportunities on complex sites.

She is thoroughly familiar with the practical issues related to interventions in historic buildings. She has successfully managed changes to historic fabric including upgrades to building services and compliance with acoustic and thermal performance codes.

Veronica has strong design skills and is experienced in the contract arrangements of delivering construction projects. She is adept at advising on design-led schemes that can enhance a sense of place and can scope conservation works associated to major or minor interventions to historic places.
