

Alexandra Gillard
Associate Director, Archaeology
BA MSc MCIfA

Alexandra has over 11 years' experience as a professional archaeologist, working in both the public and private sectors. She is responsible for preparing desk-based assessments, inputting into Environmental Statements, negotiating with LPAs to agree schemes of archaeological work and managing sub-contractors for a growing number of, largely residential, developers.

Experience

Alex has extensive experience in preparing Desk Based Assessments and Heritage Assessments, including assessing setting impacts. She has also contributed to Environmental Statements for major schemes and is proficient in writing project designs for archaeological work and management of sub-contractors on site.

With over eleven years' professional experience working within the historic environment sector, she has managed projects all over the Country. Her work in this sector has offered the opportunity to focus on the Midlands, which has provided her with a broad knowledge base of the area.

Since joining the Newark Heritage team, Alex has provided archaeological and heritage consultancy advice on a wide range of projects including residential, distribution, energy and industrial schemes. She has a keen commercial awareness and understanding of the planning system.
