

Victoria Brocksopp

Associate Director – Built Heritage

BA (Hons) MA

Victoria has a broad experience of working as a heritage professional in both the public and private sectors. Using detailed knowledge and understanding she is able to advise on all stages of the development control process, including pre-application advice, and provide input into the Environmental Impact Assessment process. She has also provided specialist advice relating to designation (including rebuttals) and is experienced in engaging positively with Historic England, conservation officers and working as part of multi-disciplinary teams.

Experience

Since joining RPS CgMs, Victoria has been involved in a wide range of projects in London and the South East, providing Heritage Statements and Impact Assessments for projects involving new development in conservation areas, works to listed buildings and development affecting the settings of various heritage assets. She has also prepared assessments appraising the potential of particular buildings for designation, including public houses, farmhouses and military structures, and provided wider heritage advice relating to repairs to listed structures and design feedback.

Between 2009 and 2011 Victoria completed a two year professional Historic Environment Traineeship Scheme at English Heritage, working across the organisation's planning, designation and specialist advice departments. She also worked on secondment with Leeds City Council's Conservation and Design Team, covering a range of planning casework and strategic initiatives.

Victoria studied Archaeology at the University of Durham and completed a Masters in Buildings Archaeology at the University of York, developing an archaeological approach to the interpretation of historic buildings alongside a good understanding of conservation best practice.
