Historic Building Recording

CgMs has been working for the National Trust to provide an historic building record of Leith Hill Place and estate. Leith Hill Place is an 18th-century country house with an older 16th or 17th-century core. It is sited within a small estate and with a series of spectacular views. It is the policy of the National Trust to improve understanding of the architectural and social history of their houses and estates so that they may more fully realise the potential of their significance and importance. At Leith Hill Place for example there are important cultural connections with the Wedgwood, Vaughan Williams and Darwin families.
